Wealth is realised out of the world’s potentialities including those of living beings.

The creation of potentialities throughout the world is a continuous process:

1. From pure consciousness
2. Into crude matter
3. The evolution of living beings
4. Back to consciousness

Wealth, if not properly defined, may mean only riches. But the value of wealth is to be measured in terms of its capacity to purchase commodities. That is, the purchasing capacity of wealth is its real value. This real value of wealth has not yet been properly understood in numerical terms by economists. - P.R. Sarkar
